Latino comedian Rick Gutierrez has been cracking up audiences across the country with his throwback takes on traditional family values and outlooks on marriage for years, but it's about time some higher ups in Hollywood finally got wind of his comedic talents. Gutierrez is slated to star in an HBO comedy series based on his life and the experiences he talks about in his standup act (so make sure to catch him live if you want a head start on the series). Rick's other television credits include NBC's Friday Night Videos, BET Comic View and Showtime's Latino Laugh Festival.

HBO unit laughs with Gutierrez Comedian Rick Gutierrez has inked a deal with HBO Independent Prods. to develop and star in a comedy series project for the company. Based on his stand-up routine, the show, now in early stages of development, is described as a comedic look at Gutierrez's old-school views on marriage and family. Gutierrez's management team at Power Entertainment, David Goldman and Judi Brown, are attached to executive produce. Gutierrez, a 10-year veteran on the stand-up circuit, is additionally repped by attorney Jeff Silverman. (Nellie Andreeva)
